17) Explain the differences between limited- and general-jurisdiction trial courts in the state court systems. In your answer, provide some examples of limited-jurisdiction trial courts.

Answer: Limited-jurisdiction trial courts, also called inferior courts, can only hear matters of a limited nature. Some examples of limited-jurisdiction trial courts are traffic court, juvenile court, justice-of-the-peace court, probate court, family law court, small-claims court, and specialized misdemeanor criminal court. Most limited-jurisdiction trial courts keep records of proceedings. The decisions of limited-jurisdiction trial courts are usually appealable to general-jurisdiction trial courts or appellate courts.

On the other hand, general-jurisdiction trial courts, also known as courts of record, hear matters that do not fall within the jurisdiction of a limited-jurisdiction trial court. Trial testimony and evidence are stored for future reference. Decisions of general-jurisdiction trial courts are appealable to an intermediate appellate court or to the state supreme court.

Answer: In a unanimous decision, all the justices who hear a case agree as to both its outcome and the reasoning behind the outcome. A unanimous decision becomes precedent.

A majority opinion occurs if five, six, seven, or eight justices agree on both outcome and reasoning. A majority opinion becomes precedent, just like a unanimous decision.

A plurality occurs when a majority of the justices agree as to outcome but disagree as to the reasoning leading to that outcome. A plurality decision settles the case but does not provide precedent.

A tie can occur only when the Court sits without all nine justices. If a tie occurs, the lower court decision is affirmed. A tie decision does not provide precedent.

80) Describe the need for forum-selection and choice-of-law clauses.

Answer: One issue that often comes up when parties from different states or countries have a legal dispute is which jurisdiction's court will be used. Also, sometimes there is a dispute as to which jurisdiction's laws apply to a case. When the parties have not agreed in advance, courts must make the decision about which court has jurisdiction and what law applies. This situation causes ambiguity, and resolving it will cost the parties time and money. Therefore, parties sometimes agree in their contract as to what state's courts, what federal court, or what country's court will have jurisdiction to hear a legal dispute should one arise. Such clauses in contracts are called forum-selection clauses or choice-of-forum clauses. Of course, the selected court must have jurisdiction to hear the case.

In addition to agreeing to a forum, the parties also often agree in contracts as to what state's law or country's law will apply in resolving a dispute. These clauses are called choice-of-law clauses. The selected law may be of a jurisdiction that does not have jurisdiction to hear the case.

81) Discuss the significance of the Zippo Manufacturing Company v. Zippo Dot Com, Inc. case in terms of jurisdiction in cyberspace.

Answer: A seminal case that addressed jurisdiction in cyberspace was Zippo Manufacturing Company v. Zippo Dot Com, Inc. Zippo Manufacturing Company (Zippo) manufacturers its well-known line of tobacco lighters in Bradford, Pennsylvania, and sells them worldwide. Zippo Dot Com, Inc. (Dot Com), which was a California corporation with its principal place of business and its servers located in Sunnyvale, California, operated an Internet website that transmitted information and sexually explicit material to its subscribers.

Three thousand of Dot Com's 140,000 paying subscribers worldwide were located in Pennsylvania. Zippo sued Dot Com in U.S. District Court in Pennsylvania for trademark infringement. Dot Com defended, alleging that it was not subject to personal jurisdiction in Pennsylvania because the "minimum contacts" and "traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice" standards were not met and therefore did not permit Pennsylvania to assert jurisdiction over it.

The court held that Dot Com was subject to personal jurisdiction under the Pennsylvania long-arm statute and ordered Dot Com to defend itself in Pennsylvania.

82) Discuss the need and significance of the long-arm statute.

Answer: In most states, a state court can obtain jurisdiction in a civil lawsuit over persons and businesses located in another state or country through the state's long-arm statute. These statutes extend a state's jurisdiction to nonresidents who are not served a summons within the state. The nonresident defendant in the civil lawsuit must have had some minimum contact with the state such that the maintenance of that lawsuit in that state does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.

The exercise of long-arm jurisdiction is generally permitted over nonresidents who have (1) committed torts within the state (e.g., caused an automobile accident in the state), (2) entered into a contract either in the state or that affects the state (and allegedly breached the contract), or (3) transacted other business in the state that allegedly caused injury to another person.

83) Compare and contrast between in rem and quasi in rem jurisdiction.

Answer: A court may have jurisdiction to hear and decide a case because it has jurisdiction over the property of the lawsuit. This is called in rem jurisdiction ("jurisdiction over the thing").

Sometimes a plaintiff who obtains a judgment against a defendant in one state will try to collect the judgment by attaching property of the defendant that is located in another state. This is permitted under quasi in rem jurisdiction, or attachment jurisdiction. Under the Full Faith and Credit Clause of the U.S. Constitution (Article IV, Section 1), a judgment of a court of one state must be given "full faith and credit" by the courts of another state.
