58) Encoding. To convey an experience or idea, we translate, or encode, that experience into symbols. We use words or other verbal behaviors or nonverbal behaviors such as gestures to convey the experience or idea.

Transmission. This element involves the translation of the encoded symbols into some behavior that another person can observe. The actual articulation (moving our lips, tongue, and so on) of the symbol into verbal or nonverbal observable behavior is transmission.

Medium. Communication must be conveyed through some channel or medium. Media for communication include sight, hearing, taste, touch, and smell. Some other media are television, telephone, paper and pencil, and radio. The choice of the medium is important; for example, a message that is transmitted via a formal letter from the CEO will carry more weight than the same message conveyed via an administrative assistant's memo.

Reception. The stimuli, the verbal and nonverbal symbols, reach the senses of the receiver and are conveyed to the brain for interpretation.

Decoding. The individual who receives the stimuli develops some meaning for the verbal and nonverbal symbols and decodes the stimuli. These symbols are translated into some concept or experience for the receiver. Whether or not the receiver is familiar with the symbols, or whether or not interference such as noise or a physiological problem occurs, determines how closely the message that the receiver has decoded approximates the message that the sender has encoded.

Feedback. After decoding the transmitted symbols, the receiver usually provides some response or feedback to the sender. If someone appears puzzled, we repeat the message or we encode the concept differently and transmit some different symbols to express that concept. Feedback that we receive acts as a guide or steering device and lets us know whether the receiver has interpreted our symbols as we intended.

59) Span of control—the number of subordinates a chief executive, manager, or supervisor in a criminal justice organization can effectively supervise effectively. Unity of command—the principle holding that only one person should be in command or control of a situation or an employee. Examples will vary.

60) Technical skills are those a manager needs to ensure that specific tasks are performed correctly. They are based on proven knowledge, procedures, or techniques. Human skills involve working with people, including being thoroughly familiar with what motivates employees and how to utilize group processes. Katz added that the human relations skill involves tolerance of ambiguity and empathy. Conceptual skills coordinate and integrate all the activities and interests of the organization into a common objective. It is the process of translating knowledge into action.

61) The Hawthorne studies revealed that people work for a variety of reasons, not just for money and subsistence. They seek satisfaction for more than their physical needs at work and from their coworkers. For the first time, clear evidence was gathered to support workers' social and esteem needs.

62) Maintenance or hygiene factors are those elements in the work environment that meet an employee's need to avoid pain (adequate pay, benefits, job security, decent working conditions, supervision). Hygiene factors do not satisfy or motivate, they set the stage for motivation. Motivational factors are those psychosocial factors that provide intrinsic satisfaction and serve as an incentive for people to invest more of their time, talent, energy, and expertise in productive behavior.
