Fundamentals of HR Management, 8e (Noe)

Chapter 2 Trends in Human Resource Management

1) The members of Generation X are characterized by their comfort with the latest technology, and the need to be noticed, respected, and involved.

Answer: FALSE

Explanation: Members of Generation X (1965–1980) tend to be pragmatic and cynical, and they have well-developed self-management skills. Those born from 1981 to 1995, often called Millennials or Generation Y, are comfortable with the latest technology, and they want to be noticed, respected, and involved.

2) Individuals who arrive in the United States without meeting the legal requirements for immigration or asylum are referred to as undocumented immigrants.

Answer: TRUE

Explanation: More than 1 million immigrants come to the United States legally each year as relatives of U.S. citizens, on work- or study-related visas, and other means. Other foreign-born workers in the United States arrive in the country without meeting the legal requirements for immigration or asylum. These individuals, known as undocumented or illegal immigrants, likely number in the millions.

4) Skilled knowledge workers generally do not have job opportunities in a slow economy.

Answer: FALSE

Explanation: Knowledge workers are in a position of power, because they own the knowledge that the company needs to produce its products and services. Skilled knowledge workers have many job opportunities, even in a slow economy. If they choose, they can leave a company and take their knowledge to another employer.

5) Successful organizations treat all their workers as knowledge workers.

Answer: TRUE

Explanation: The idea that only some of an organization's workers are knowledge workers has come under criticism. To the critics, this definition is no longer realistic in a day of computerized information systems and computer-controlled production processes. For the company to excel, everyone must know how their work contributes to the organization's success. Successful organizations treat all their workers as knowledge workers. They let employees know how well the organization is performing, and they invite ideas about how the organization can do better.

8) Traditional management thinking treated human resource management primarily as a means to support a company's strategy.

Answer: FALSE

Explanation: Traditional management thinking treated human resource management primarily as an administrative function, but managers today are beginning to see a more central role for HRM. They are looking at HRM as a means to support a company's strategy. The HR professionals are expected to use their knowledge in business and of human resources to help the organization develop strategies and to align HRM practices and policies with those strategies.

18) Under the new type of psychological contract, organizations expect employees to contribute time, effort, skills, abilities, and loyalty in return for job security and opportunities for promotion within the organization.

Answer: FALSE

Explanation: In the traditional version of a psychological contract, organizations expected their employees to contribute time, effort, skills, abilities, and loyalty. In return, the organizations would provide job security and opportunities for promotion. Under the new type of psychological contract, however, companies expect employees to take more responsibility for their own careers, from seeking training to balancing work and family.

20) Parkers Appliances wants to improve the quality of and lower the costs in its service department. A strategy being considered involves directing technicians on exactly how to complete service calls, which should improve customer service in addition to lowering labor costs. In addition, the technicians will work under a contract so the company doesn't have to pay the employer's share of Social Security for those workers. Is this a possible strategy for Parkers Appliances to employ?

Answer: FALSE

Explanation: In general, if employers direct workers in the details of how and when they do their jobs, these workers are legally defined as employees, not contractors. In that case, employers must meet the legal requirements for paying the employer's share of Social Security, Medicare, and unemployment insurance.

- A) contract workers in the organization.
- B) current employees of the organization.
- C) individuals who are actively seeking employment.
- D) employees who have direct contact with customers.
- E) employees of the immediate competitors of the organization.

Answer: C

Explanation: The external labor market consists of individuals who are actively seeking employment. The number and kinds of people in the external labor market determine the kinds of human resources available to an organization (and their cost).

- B) Drew, a temporary worker, being paid by a company for his services
- C) Morgan, an engineering graduate, looking for a job
- D) Silas, an employee, going through training
- E) Jamaal, an employee, securing his financial services certification

Answer: C

Explanation: The external labor market consists of individuals who are actively seeking employment. The number and kinds of people in the external labor market determine the kinds of human resources available to an organization (and their cost). In this case, the example of Morgan, an individual who is looking for a job, exemplifies a member of the external labor market.

24) Samuel Homes wants to expand rapidly by building homes in major markets throughout the United States. Which forecast by the Bureau of Labor Statistics presents the most significant challenge to rapid expansion?

- A) whites continuing to be the largest racial group
- B) more women participating in the paid labor force
- C) Asian-Americans being the fastest-growing racial group
- D) greater racial and ethnic diversity
- E) a slowing growth rate for the U.S. civilian labor force

Answer: E

Explanation: The Bureau of Labor Statistics has projected that from 2016 to 2026, the total U.S. civilian labor force will grow from 156 million to 168 million workers. This 6.6 percent increase is noticeably lower than the more than 13.1 percent increase experienced between 1996 and 2006. Slow growth in the labor force means more competition for employers in the labor markets.

- A) The labor force is expected to grow at a greater rate than at any other time in U.S. history.
- B) The largest proportion of the labor force is expected to be in the 16- to 25-year age group.
- C) The segment of the workforce nearing retirement age will hold steady.
- D) Despite a small increase in the number of young workers, the overall workforce will be aging.
- E) The total workforce of the United States will considerably decrease.

Answer: D

Explanation: It is expected that despite a small increase in the number of young workers, the overall workforce will be aging. Young workers between the ages of 16 and 24 will actually be fewer in number. This combination of trends will cause the overall workforce to age.

26) Hadley, a business researcher, believes that organizations will have to spend a lot of money on employee health care in the future. Her colleague Owen argues that organizations will not have to increase their spending on employee health care benefits. Which statement weakens Owen's argument?

- A) The labor force is expected to grow at a greater rate by 2026 than at any other time in U.S. history.
- B) The largest proportion of the labor force is expected to be in the 16- to 25-year age group.
- C) The fastest-growing age group is workers 16–25, who are prone to having accidents.
- D) The fastest-growing share of the workforce is at least 55 years old.
- E) The total cost of labor in the United States will decrease considerably in the near future.

Answer: D

Explanation: From 2016 to 2026, the fastest-growing age group is expected to be workers 55 and older. The 25- to 44-year-old group will increase its numbers only slightly, so its share of the total workforce will fall. With a growing share of the workforce nearing retirement age, human resource professionals will need to spend much of their time on concerns related to planning retirement, retraining older workers, and motivating workers whose careers have reached a plateau. Organizations will struggle with ways to control the rising costs of health care and other benefits, and many of tomorrow's managers will supervise employees much older than themselves.

27) In high-tech industries, such as computer software development, employers press the federal government for immigration laws that allow for a greater supply of foreign-born workers. What is the main reason these companies cite for that effort?

- A) There is a lack of adequate technology in the United States.
- B) Undocumented immigrants work harder than U.S. citizens.
- C) Qualified technical workers are scarce in the United States.
- D) U.S. workers do not want this physically demanding work.
- E) The size of the U.S. workforce is declining.

Answer: C

Explanation: In industries such as computer software development, employers say they have difficulty finding enough qualified U.S. workers to fill technical jobs. These employers are pressing for immigration laws to allow a greater supply of foreign-born workers.

- B) creating separate career tracks for employees with families.
- C) avoiding the use of affirmative action policies.
- D) reducing cultural diversity by selective hiring.
- E) encouraging career development for women and minorities.

Answer: E

Explanation: Managing cultural diversity involves creating an organizational culture that values diversity; ensuring that human resource management systems are bias free; encouraging career development for women and minorities; promoting knowledge and acceptance of cultural differences; ensuring involvement in education both within and outside the organization; and dealing with employees' resistance to diversity.

- A) physical strength
- B) mastery of a particular piece of machinery
- C) interpersonal skills
- D) ability to perform routine tasks
- E) ability to work with a tool

Answer: C

Explanation: The increasing use of computers to do routine tasks has shifted the kinds of skills needed for employees in the U.S. economy. Qualities such as physical strength and mastery of a particular piece of machinery are no longer important for many jobs. More employers are looking for mathematical, verbal, and interpersonal skills, such as the ability to solve math or other problems or reach decisions as part of a team.

- A) workforce analysis system.
- B) high-performance work system.
- C) supply chain system.
- D) total quality management system.
- E) holistic management system.

Answer: B

Explanation: High-performance work systems refer to organizations that have the best possible fit between their social system and technical system. Among the trends that are occurring in today's high-performance work systems are reliance on knowledge workers, empowerment of employees to make decisions, and use of teamwork. In this case, Baker Corp. has a high-performance work system because it consists of empowered employee teams with specialized knowledge of customers' preferences and cost-efficient processes.

- C) Competitors are looking for ways to standardize prices in their respective industries.
- D) Employers are looking for ways to tap people's creativity and interpersonal skills.
- E) Customers are demanding standardized products over customized products.

Answer: D

Explanation: As the nature of the workforce and the technology available to organizations changed, so have the requirements for creating a high-performance work system. Customers are demanding high-quality and customized products, employees are seeking flexible work arrangements, and employers are looking for ways to tap people's creativity and interpersonal skills.

- A) technical jobs.
- B) mining and resource extraction.
- C) agriculture.
- D) service occupations.
- E) manufacturing.

Answer: D

Explanation: The growth in e-commerce, plus the shift from a manufacturing to a service and information economy, has changed the nature of employees that are most in demand. The Bureau of Labor Statistics forecasts that between 2016 and 2026, most new jobs will be in service occupations, especially health care.

- D) They are not expected to be technically efficient and are only involved in direct interactions with customers.
- E) They do not have a lot of job opportunities because employers can simply order these employees to perform tasks.

Answer: C

Explanation: Knowledge workers are in a position of power because they own the knowledge that the company needs in order to produce its products and services, and they must share their knowledge and collaborate with others in order for their employer to succeed. Replacing these employees is difficult and time consuming. They have many job opportunities even in a slow economy.

They coordinate their work efficiently with the help of technology, such as videoconferencing, mobile phones, and e-mail, for the production of marketing activities. Which statement is true of Dino Inc.?

- A) It has a vertical organizational structure.
- B) It does not hold employees accountable for products and services.
- C) It encourages virtual teams.
- D) It encourages centralized decision making.
- E) It has self-employed individuals with multiple clients.

Answer: C

Explanation: Teamwork is the assignment of work to groups of employees with various skills who interact to assemble a product or provide a service. In some organizations, technology is enabling teamwork even when workers are at different locations or work at different times.

These organizations use virtual teams—teams that rely on communications technology such as videoconferences, mobile phones, and e-mail to keep in touch and coordinate activities.

After a year of collecting these ideas, the HR department conducted an employee survey and learned that its employees did not feel very empowered. What else should Sky Meadows do to improve the sense of empowerment?

- A) Hold employees accountable for their results.
- B) Train employees to use information resources.
- C) Show that management is listening to the ideas and implementing the valuable ones.
- D) Train managers to link employees to resources within and outside the organization.
- E) Encourage employees to interact with staff throughout the organization.

Answer: C

Explanation: Employee empowerment can extend to innovation. Employees at all levels are encouraged to share their ideas for satisfying customers better and operating more efficiently and safely. 42) How has the use of employee empowerment affected the recruitment process in the United States.?

- A) It has enhanced the need for people with working knowledge of operating different kinds of machinery.
- B) It has substantially increased employment opportunities for workers with less education.
- C) It has shifted the focus away from technical skills to general cognitive and interpersonal skills.
- D) It has significantly reduced recruitment costs by using low-cost strategies, though it hinders innovation.
- E) It has made the recruitment process less time-consuming.

Answer: C

Explanation: Use of employee empowerment shifts the recruiting focus away from technical skills and toward general cognitive and interpersonal skills. Employees who have responsibility for a final product or service must be able to listen to customers, adapt to changing needs, and creatively solve a variety of problems.

43) In what way does teamwork make work more significant?

- A) It centralizes authority so workers do not have to make decisions.
- B) Team members have less authority, so they can relax.
- C) Teams get to work on fast-moving assembly lines.
- D) Team members contribute to quality and assume many activities traditionally reserved for managers.
- E) Teams spare employees from having to work directly with customers.

Answer: D

Explanation: Work teams often assume many activities traditionally reserved for managers, such as selecting new team members, scheduling work, and coordinating work with customers and other units of the organization. Work teams also contribute to total quality by performing inspection and quality-control activities while the product or service is being completed.

In addition to his regular job duties, Brady works in tandem with his other coworkers to schedule work, select new team members, and carry out multiple assembly tasks. This style of work is best described as

- A) centralized.
- B) a virtual team.
- C) teamwork.
- D) agile development.
- E) knowledge work.

Answer: C

Explanation: Teamwork is the assignment of work to groups of employees with various skills who interact to assemble a product or provide a service. Work teams often assume many activities traditionally reserved for managers, such as selecting new team members, scheduling work, and coordinating work with customers and other units of the organization.

- A) Teamwork encourages centralized decision making, which will lower costs.
- B) Teamwork eliminates the need for quality control.
- C) Teamwork makes work motivating for employees and helps reduce labor costs.
- D) Teamwork simplifies each job to a few tasks, reducing errors.
- E) Teamwork reduces errors because team members must communicate face-to-face.

Answer: C

Explanation: Teamwork can motivate employees by making work more interesting and significant. At organizations that rely on teamwork, labor costs may be lower as well.

The team asks the customers for their requirements, develops a sample, and sends it to them for feedback. The team continues production based on the feedback given by their clients. The firm spends less time on negotiating contracts and documenting processes. This scenario implies that Hutch is using which approach?

- A) just-in-time
- B) total quality management
- C) agile
- D) downsizing
- E) outsourcing

Answer: C

Explanation: In agile software development, self-directed teams of developers and programmers work directly with those who will use the software, deliver components, and seek feedback. The process is "agile" because the team changes specifications and code as a result of the feedback throughout the development process.

 - C) the government regulations of the countries in which the organization does business.
 - D) the mastery of a particular piece of machinery among the employees of the organization.
 - E) the organization's market share in the industry.

Answer: A

Explanation: The specific ways in which human resource professionals support the organization's strategy vary according to their level of involvement and the nature of the strategy. Strategic issues include emphasis on quality and decisions about growth and efficiency. Human resource management can support these strategies, including efforts such as quality improvement programs, mergers and acquisitions, and restructuring.

49) Miller Inc. is a large corporation preparing to acquire GrowIt, a start-up business. Miller has many policies and procedures based on years of experience. Employees at GrowIt are used to figuring out the best practices as they go along. How can Miller's HR professionals help the company prepare for the acquisition to succeed in spite of these differences?

- A) by replacing GrowIt's employees with new employees who will follow rules
- B) by reassuring everyone that any differences will disappear after the acquisition
- C) by identifying the differences and developing employees' skills in conflict resolution
- D) by planning systems to ensure there are no conflicts following the acquisition
- E) by training employees in how to set up new HR systems

Answer: C

Explanation: HRM should have a significant role in carrying out a merger or acquisition. Differences between the businesses involved in the deal make conflict inevitable. Training efforts should therefore include development of skills in conflict resolution. Also, HR professionals have to sort out differences in the two companies' practices with regard to compensation, performance appraisal, and other HR systems.

- 62) During downsizing, the HRM function must "surgically" reduce the workforce by cutting only the workers who are less valuable in their performance. What is a reason for this being difficult to achieve?

- A) The definition of "less valuable" is fluid and hard to define.
- B) Downsizing companies tend to have a strong, interconnected hierarchy.
- C) The best workers may leave before the organization lays off anyone.
- D) Voluntary turnover is encouraged for all levels of employees.
- E) Decision making has become decentralized, leaving no department with the power to reduce the workforce.

Answer: C

Explanation: Downsizing presents a number of challenges and opportunities for HRM. In terms of challenges, the HRM function must "surgically" reduce the workforce by cutting only the workers who are less valuable in their performance. Achieving this is difficult because the best workers are most able (and often willing) to find alternative employment and may leave voluntarily before the organization lays off anyone.

- A) Downsizing tends to eliminate good performers instead of poor performers first.
- B) Downsizing demands the HR department have a third-party vendor provide services, which results in lower revenues.
- C) Downsizing conducts a complete review of the organization's critical work processes, which results in heavy expenditures.
- D) The HRM of a firm must provide downsized employees with multiple stock options.
- E) When labor costs fall after a downsizing, sales per employee also tend to fall.

Answer: E

Explanation: Contrary to popular belief, research has found that downsizing is associated with negative stock returns and lower profitability following the layoffs. One reason may be that although labor costs fall after a downsizing, sales per employee also tend to fall.

69) Fuller Corporation recently undertook a reengineering strategy to increase the efficiency of its processes. According to your text, will reengineering have any effect on Fuller's HR department?

- A) No; the HR department will continue to accomplish its goals as it always has.
- B) Yes; the structure of pay and benefits will have to be redesigned.
- C) Yes; employees will require training, but only those in the top managerial positions.
- D) Yes; new employees with the same skill sets as current workers will need to be hired.
- E) No; employee levels will stay the same, with none being hired or laid off.

Answer: B

Explanation: Reengineering affects human resource management. The way the HR department itself accomplishes its goals may change dramatically. Employees may need training for their reengineered jobs. The organization may need to redesign the structure of its pay and benefits to make them more appropriate for its new way of operating. It also may need to recruit employees with a new set of skills. Reengineering often results in employees being laid off or reassigned to new jobs, as the organization's needs change. 86) Nora is interested in a career in human resource management. She expected her first job to focus on giving employees access to information and enrollment forms for training, benefits, and other programs. However, she has since learned that HR employees spend less time doing that kind of work. Which trend is behind that change?

- A) Employees can now get such information through self-service.
- B) Benefits have been cut from most company programs.
- C) Managers have taken over those HR duties.
- D) Lack of voluntary participation has led to the elimination of employee training programs.
- E) Due to privacy laws, human resources cannot obtain any sensitive employee information.

Answer: A

Explanation: Information technology is changing the way HR departments handle record keeping and information sharing. Today HR employees use technology to automate much of their work in managing employee records and giving employees access to information and enrollment forms for training, benefits, and other programs. As a result, HR employees play a smaller role in maintaining records, and employees now get information through self-service. This means employees have online access to information about HR issues such as training, benefits, compensation, and contracts; go online to enroll themselves in programs and services; and provide feedback through online surveys.

102) Explain the problem of skill deficiencies in the U.S. workforce. What are companies doing to address this issue?

Answer: The increasing use of computers to do routine tasks has shifted the kinds of skills needed for employees in the U.S. economy. Such qualities as physical strength and mastery of a particular piece of machinery are no longer important for many jobs. More employers are looking for mathematical, verbal, and interpersonal skills, such as the ability to solve math or other problems or reach decisions as part of a team. Often, when organizations are looking for technical skills, they are looking for skills related to computers and using the Internet. Today's employees must be able to handle a variety of responsibilities, interact with customers, and think creatively.

Competition for qualified college graduates in many fields is intense. Some companies are unable to find qualified employees and instead rely on training to correct skill deficiencies. Other companies team up with universities, community colleges, and high schools to design and teach courses ranging from basic reading to design blueprint reading. Not all the skills employers want require a college education. In some areas, companies and communities have set up apprenticeship and training programs to fix the worker shortage.

103) Define the concept of knowledge workers and explain their impact on high-performance work systems.

Answer: As the nature of the workforce and the technology available to organizations have changed, so have the requirements for creating a high-performance work system. Customers are demanding high-quality and customized products, employees are seeking flexible work arrangements, and employers are looking for ways to tap people's creativity and interpersonal skills. Such demands require that organizations make full use of their people's knowledge and skill. This has resulted in increased demand for knowledge workers. Employees whose main contribution to the organization is specialized knowledge, such as knowledge of customers, a process, or a profession are referred to as knowledge workers.

Knowledge workers are in a position of power, because they own the knowledge that the company needs in order to produce its products and services, and they must share their knowledge and collaborate with others in order for their employer to succeed. An employer cannot simply order these employees to perform tasks. Managers depend on the employees' willingness to share information. Furthermore, skilled knowledge workers have many job opportunities, even in a slow economy. If they choose, they can leave a company and take their knowledge to another employer. Replacing them may be difficult and time consuming.

Recently, the idea that only some of an organization's workers are knowledge workers has come under criticism. To the critics, this definition is no longer realistic in a day of computerized information systems and computer-controlled production processes. For the company to excel, everyone must know how their work contributes to the organization's success. At the same time, employees—especially younger generations, which grew up with the Internet—will expect to have wide access to information. From this perspective, successful organizations treat all their workers as knowledge workers. They let employees know how well the organization is performing, and they invite ideas about how the organization can do better.

105) Explain what a psychological contract is and compare the traditional version to the new type.

Answer: A psychological contract is a description of what an employee expects to contribute in an employment relationship and what the employer will provide the employee in exchange for those contributions. Unlike a written sales contract, the psychological contract is not formally put into words. Instead, it describes unspoken expectations that are widely held by employers and employees.

In the traditional version of this psychological contract, organizations expected their employees to contribute time, effort, skills, abilities, and loyalty. In return, the organizations would provide job security and opportunities for promotion.

However, this arrangement is being replaced with a new type of psychological contract. Companies expect employees to take more responsibility for their own careers, from seeking training to balancing work and family. These expectations result in less job security for employees, who can count on working for several companies. In exchange for top performance and working longer hours without job security, employees want companies to provide flexible work schedules, comfortable working conditions, more control over how they accomplish work, training and development opportunities, and financial incentives based on how the organization performs.
